An introduction to Research and Evaluation in Practice
Presented by Dr Peter Orpin

Research and evaluation activity in one form or another is part of most good reflexive practice. It doesn't have to be a randomised controlled trial with complex statistics published in a top journal to make a valuable contribution to improving your own and your peers' professional practice. This half day workshop is designed as an easy introduction to the basics of research and evaluation as a first step for those wishing to inject a little research or evaluation into their day to day practice. This is a basic level ‘Cook’s Tour’ of (primarily) social research for health and would suit those who have no previous research experience.
